2020 challenged us in ways we could have never expected. The COVID-19 pandemic put us all in places of hardship and recovery, highlighted the continued fight for equity, and brought the passing of friends, family, and community leaders.

We moved quickly to adapt to the evolving and complex needs of our students and families while serving our mission to make intercultural music education and literacy relevant, accessible, and inclusive.

I am proud of INTEMPO's resiliency and progress. Our longstanding programs continued to serve our students and families when they were most in need. Our faculty and staff were enthusiastic, committed, and flexible as they engaged with 100% of our students and families. We delivered over 1,100 hours of online music education and academic tutoring in reading, mathematics, and other subjects, while providing 102 hours of professional development to our faculty. With the help of our partners and family advocacy team, we provided books, computers, food, rent support, and face masks to our community.

INTEMPO creatively re-imagined what could be. Through live streaming our Samba Cultural Crossover Concert; Soundscape of the Americas Concert with The John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts; Drive-in Documentary Screening with CT Humanities; and Trilingual Music Experience with the Ferguson Library, we reached over 14,000 viewers spanning the Western hemisphere. Family and friends of students as far away as Ecuador watched the students perform and shared in their joy across geographies and time zones.

Beyond the challenges of a global pandemic, April 2020 brought the loss of cherished lead teaching artist, award-winning music educator, friend, wife, and mother Terry Hess. In her honor, the Terry Hess Memorial Fund was established by her family and granted tuition scholarships for three first-generation students to attend college in 2020-2021.

In Memory of Lead Teaching Artist Terry Hess (1957-2020)

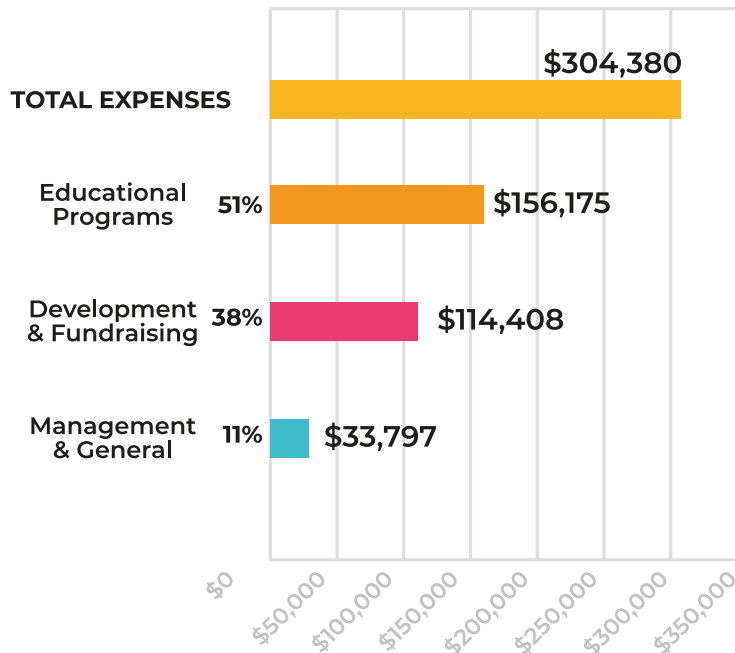

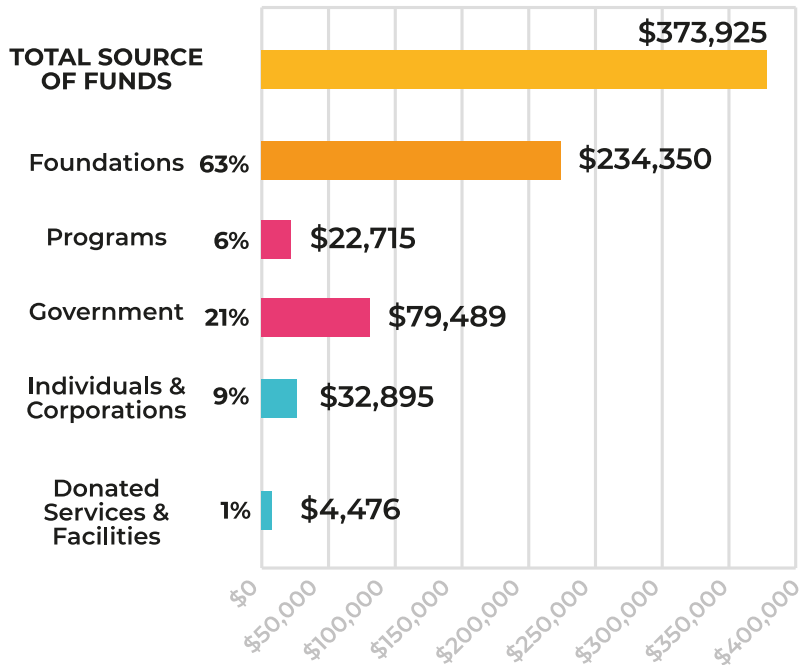

As we continue to navigate the impacts of the pandemic, our communities need the transformational power of music and education more than ever. Music education and literacy create pathways for our students to hope, imagine, and develop skills that serve them in this moment and into the future.

Let's continue to stay connected, safely engaged, and inspired as we build the future of INTEMPO together.

With gratitude,

José R. Feliciano
Board Chair
